

Investigative fellowships at Harvard offered

Experienced investigative journalists can apply for yearlong fellowships.

The Lab at the Edmond J. Safra Center for Ethics at Harvard University is offering fellowships in residence in Cambridge to produce monographs about targeted institutions.

Such institutions can be either public or private, and if private, then either for-profit or not-for-profit. They include public health institutions, the financial services industry, the elected state judiciary, media (public and private) and Congress.

The ideal candidate will have a minimum of five years of investigative reporting experience. The salary is commensurate with experience. Health benefits will be provided. International fellows will be assisted with visas.

Applicants must submit application materials online, two letters of reference, a CV, a comprehensive project budget, a proposal describing the institution planned to be covered, and any relevant experience with that institution.

The deadline is Jan. 1.

For more information, click here: <http://www.ethics.harvard.edu/images/resources/pdfs/call4investigativejournalists.pdf>